Is This Stone Worth a Million?

A dispatch from Spokane, Wash., dated May 2, says: "Last Monday Martin Neilly was returning to Rossland, B. C., after an unsuccessful prospecting trip into the Salmon River district. He reached the Columbia river at a point about six miles north of Trail Landing, B. C., at noon on that day, and selecting a spot on the bank of the stream at the foot of Lookout Mountain he sat down to eat his dinner. As he did so he noticed a huge boulder half buried in the sand in a dry portion of the river not far from where he sat.

When he was through with his repast he shouldered his pick and sauntered over toward the huge boulder. He examined it at first in a casual way, but then his experienced eye told him that it was promising-looking quartz rock. He struck his pick into it several times and dislodged a piece of the decomposed rock. Great was his surprise when picking up the fragment he saw traces of gold and copper. He walked around the boulder and knocked off piece after piece, and as he did so his excitement increased with each succeeding disclosure. In speaking of the circumstance to the correspondent, he said:

"It was some time before I fully realized what a fortune I had discovered, but when it dawned upon me that at last I was a rich man I am afraid I made such demonstrations as would justify any one who might have seen me in believing that I had lost my senses. For several years I have been 'grubstaking' in prospecting these mountains without success, and many is the time I have gone hungry for the want of the price to get something to eat, and can you blame me for going nearly crazy when I realized that I was no longer poor?"

When Neilly had demonstrated to his satisfaction that the huge mountain of rock before him was full of rich metal, he proceeded to locate his discovery by posting the usual notice taking in the ground upon which the boulder rested. He then selected a number of the specimens of rock that he had chipped off, and putting them in his pocket, started for Rossland, arriving there late in the afternoon. He went to several assayers and left some of the rock to be assayed.

The next morning one assayer's report showed that the ore contained $53 in gold to the ton, besides being rich in copper. The other two assays showed $47 and $58 in gold and also copper. From the position of the boulder, lying as it does on the dry bed of the river all by itself and at the foot of Lookout Mountain, which rears its crest several thousand feet up in the air, it is evident that at some period this huge body of rock has become dislodged from the mountain and rolled down with fearful momentum to the point where it now rests.

The boulder, as near as can be estimated, contains in the neighborhood of 20,000 tons of rock. As yet Neilly is undecided what he will do with his boulder. He says he may conclude to have it mined and shipped to the Trail smelter for reduction, or he may decide to dispose of it to some syndicate or capitalist for a good round figure. He had set no price on it, and says he will not until he has had time to think the matter over.
